

Why do companies outsource their distribution function?

Companies change to third party logistics providers because of four primary considerations; space, cost, technology and resources.

As a third party provider offering clients shared sites and resources we are able to achieve greater opportunities for our clients while enabling them to focus on their own core competencies.

IS YOUR EXISTING WAREHOUSE TOO BIG OR TOO SMALL?

IS IT EVER JUST THE RIGHT SIZE?

Most businesses seem to have either too much space or not enough and seldom the optimum amount. During an economic upturn businesses can quickly fill their existing warehouse prompting the need to look for, and change to, a larger and more expensive site.

Alternatively, many companies look at their costs and realise that they are only utilising a percentage of their existing space but pay a hundred percent.

Couple this with the administration of lease negotiations and what appears to be a simple task soon becomes complex.

Stocklink is able to provide flexible walls by only charging for space utilised, whilst managing - at our own risk - the opportunity for future growth. This means that we take on the challenge of accommodating your seasonal peaks. If your company spends part of the year manufacturing product that will be used later, and having to store it in every nook and cranny, contract warehousing is the solution.
